Eng 2015H Theory and Practice of Tutoring
“Theory and Practice of Tutoring Writing,” is an English/Honors College Writing Intensive (WI) class which addresses both the theory and practice of tutoring and the foundations of good writing. Therefore, in addition to theoretical frames for what writing tutors do, it focuses on hands-on craft and practical experience working with other writers. At its heart is a shared set of assumptions about tutoring writing. In order to help someone else competently, a tutor needs to have an expert command of the craft of writing herself. A tutor needs to know something not only about the practical application of rhetoric and composition theory, but also about the subtleties of verbal and nonverbal communication. Hands-on experience from both sides of the desk is a crucial part of the process of learning to work with other writers. Online tutoring is a valuable part of the skill set with both advantages and disadvantages over traditional face-to-face scenarios, and it makes considerable demands on the tutor’s craft as a writer and as a reader of both prose and people. This course also prepares students to work as writing tutors, and, in fact, doing well in it qualifies them for a part-time job in the Writing Center in future semesters. Prerequisite: Engl 1000. A/F. This class meets Mondays and Wednesdays from 2:00-2:50pm. Students interested in the course should contact Dr. Rachel Harper: harperrp@missouri.edu This course fulfills a lower division Writing Intensive requirement and General Education credit (Humanities).

Students practice those skills, using authentic materials in real-life situations. Prerequisites: 2 years high school French; Honors eligibility required.

FRENCH 3005H  Topics in French-Humanities/Fine Arts
Science as Reflected in French Literature from the Middle-Ages through the Twentieth-Century.
In today’s world of professional specialization and economic globalization, the dialogue between literature and science becomes more pertinent than it has ever been before. This course examines the shifting relationship between literature and science from a historical perspective, by way of close readings of French literary texts from the Middle-Ages through the Twentieth-Century. The texts chosen relate to science in diverse ways: some question the border between literature and science, others proclaim their fundamental difference; some provide observations that anticipate scientific discoveries, others lay out funding principles for modern science; some poke fun at bad doctors or false scientists, others use scientific knowledge as generators of new literary forms. These texts not only relate to science in diverse manners, but also touch on a wide range of scientific fields: botany, entomology, genetics, neuroscience, psychoanalysis, medicine, and mathematics.

This course is designed for students of literature who are interested in learning how to conduct in-depth research on a specific topic, and/or for those in science who seek cultural enrichment through a dialogue with literature. By exploring diverse reflections of science in French literature, this course not only places the relationship between literature and science in ever-changing historical contexts, but also raises questions about categories such as literature and science. This class emphasizes active participation of each student as well as close interactions between students and professor. Besides French literary texts in translation, students will read additional texts in history of literature, history of science, literary theory and critique. Course work includes one oral presentation, two research papers, a midterm and a final exam, and pop-up quizzes. Students from diverse disciplines are required to bring their specific perspectives and insights to fuel discussions and debates. They will also work on a one-to-one basis with the professor toward the accomplishment of a final research project of their choice.

Phil 1000H  General Introduction to Philosophy
The aim of this course is to introduce you to some of the large issues in philosophy and its history. Thus we shall look at some classic texts, e.g., by Wittgenstein, Descartes, as well as some more recent ones, e.g., by Searle. My hope is that by the end of the semester you will have read some discussions about some important issues, learned some important distinctions in those areas, and come to value the importance of making distinctions. Some have said that Philosophy is the art of making distinctions. I agree and not the two aspects, the making of distinctions and doing so artfully. An Honors section makes several things possible: getting to know one another better, having regular and fruitful dialogue [which in my mind is an essential part of Philosophy], and having several longer writing exercises.

Phil 1100H  Introduction to Ethics
Introduction to different philosophical theories regarding when acts are morally right rather than wrong; when things are good rather than bad; nature of the "good life", nature of ethical reasoning and justification.

Psych 4815H  Cross Cultural Psychology
This course will adopt a psychological approach to the study of the cross-cultural experience. We will spend our time investigating how culture affects and determines human behavior, thoughts, emotions, and interactions with others, on both individual and societal levels. In particular, we will focus on how various cultures shape correspondingly different behaviors and thought patterns in their respective members. The course will assume the form of a seminar with class discussions and group exercises. Its main goal is to combine current psychological theory, with semester-long cultural immersion projects in order to yield an in-depth academic and personal understanding of culture and its effects on human thought, emotion, and behavior. Written and audiovisual materials will further supplement and hopefully enhance your appreciation and understanding of the cross-cultural experience.
